

I would like to comment on Indiana's current telephone privacy law. This has been very beneficial to me. I put my name on the "do-not-call" list, and I no longer receive any sort of telemarketing calls. I am very worried that if this law is changed, I will once again receive the numerous phone calls every night that I loathe so much. By eliminating this list, companies will waste their money calling me - if I get a telemarketing call, I simply hang up before I can be bothered any further. I believe it is my right as an American to have this telephone privacy list. I have a right to my privacy. I have a right to not be annoyed in the privacy of my own home. The FCC should not do anything to lessen Indiana's laws regarding telephone privacy.
